RAIDS

The Palmer Raids

In 1920 a series of raids were done, led by Attorney General Mitchell Palmer. These raids were done during America's "First Red Scare" and were made to arrest racial leftists like anarchists, communists, socialists, and immigrants. The reason was due to post-World War 1 concern, the Russian Revolution, and bombings that occurred. Including one bombing at General Palmer's home. Also one bombing a month earlier where bombs were mailed to the Mayor of Seattle and a U.S Senator. That was the fuse that lit off these raids to happen.

The outcome of these raids led to about 10,000 total arrests. Over hundreds were deported, including a famous writer, Emma Goldman. They were deported on a ship nicknamed "The Soviet Ark," and the outcome publicly was really negative and received tons of backlash. It was mostly criticism for the violation of the constitutional rights due to the fact that most of the people arrested didn't even belong to radical or socialist groups. In all, it created a long line of civil liberties issues while also adding to the formation of the U.S. intelligence organization

The Sacco & Vanzetti Case

SACCO
& VANZETTI

The Sacco & Vanzetti Case

Nicola Sacco was born on April 22, 1891. He was a very skilled shoemaker and a night watchman. He migrated from Italy at the age of 17. Before migration, he would work at his father's vineyard. His partner was Bartolomeo Vanzetti, who was born on June 11, 1888. He was also an Italian immigrant and a fish peddler. These two men were anarchists who were allegedly accused of shooting and killing Alessandro Berardelli (payroll guard) and Frederick Parmenter (paymaster) on the night of April 15, 1920 in a hold-up robbery. These two men worked at a shoe factory and were in charge of transporting the company's payroll.

This case is definitely considered controversial, and many people argued that Sacco and Vanzetti were innocent due to the discrimination Sacco and Vanzetti received during the trial because of their Italian heritage. Many speculated that Sacco and Vanzetti were wrongfully accused of this murder & robbery due to the lack of evidence, and yet, they were found guilty. Sacco and Vanzetti were eventually sentenced to death, and were executed by the electric chair on August 23, 1927. The controversy of this case led to adding more fear onto the Red Scare, giving it a deeper meaning, as civil liberties could be sacrificed in the case of anti-communism and anti-anarchism

The Ku Klux Klan

The Ku Klux Klan

The Ku Klux Klan was a group of white supremacists that were in the United States. They used terror and violence to enforce racism and social control towards Black Americans. During the Red Scare, though, they also enforced their terror and violence towards immigrants, communists, and anarchists. The clan members use threats, beatings, lynchings, cross burnings, and economic pressure towards immigrants and others they saw as threats.

Connection to the Red Scare?

During the period of the Red Scare, the Klan used post-World War I bombings and fear of Bolshevism by arguing that the U.S. should be stricter on immigration limits and social control, as they were needed to stop communism. During the 1920s, the Klan was not just a racist vigilante group but a powerful cultural and political force feeding into Red Scare anxieties about foreigners, radicals, and social change. Later on in the decade their influence declined; their scandals, internal corruption, and mixture of white supremacy, nativism, and anti-communism left a mark on American politics and society.
